

LIFE WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS: Not a Hollywood Movie

WHY

Today, 78 years after the dawn of the atomic age depicted in the film Oppenheimer, over 13,000 nuclear weapons exist on the planet — 90% of which are possessed by the United States or Russia. If detonated, only a small fraction of these bombs could kill billions of people and effectively end human civilization as we know it.

What's more, nuclear weapons are also deeply linked with pressing problems like racial and economic justice, militarism, preserving our democracy, and climate change.

Nuclear weapons are the most extreme example of power consolidated into the hands of a small number of people and countries wielded against the rest of us and all of humanity. We can and we must get rid of them. Before it's too late.

Nuclear weapons don't make us safe nor do they deter or prevent war. Rather they are the greatest threat to our security and survival. And today, the threat of nuclear war is perhaps greater than it's ever been.

HOW

The only sure way to prevent nuclear war is to rid the world of nuclear weapons, a goal that is possible if we the people demand it and join a growing global chorus working to confront this existential threat to humanity.

You, me, all of us. PSR Arizona is an endorsing organization with Back from the Brink: Bringing Communities Together to Abolish Nuclear Weapons, a national grassroots campaign advocating for the United States to adopt common sense policies that will make us safer and get the U.S. and all of countries with nuclear weapons to negotiate a verifiable, time-bound agreement to eliminate all nuclear weapons from the planet.
